Welcome to the last issue of this volume (volume) of Australian Academy of Accounting and Finance Review (AAAFR). This issue covers a diverse of topics commencing with Zeynep Çopur (2016) exploring relationship between financial literacy and quality of life. The study finds that there is relationship between financial literacy and quality of life.

In the second paper, Ioannis et al. (2016) present the constraints and facilitators of social entrepreneurship development in mountainous areas by considering a case study of Pyli in Greece. The results confirm the view that average people are not aware of the benefits of social entrepreneurship.

In the third paper, Prabhu et al. (2016) present the social entrepreneurship among millennial by doing a three country comparative study. This paper suggests that for millennial, enhancing social entrepreneurial self-efficacy may be the key to increasing intentions to become a social entrepreneur.

In the fourth paper, Unuvar and Kaya (2016) present the service quality in hospitality enterprises using Servperf Service Quality dimensions. It is revealed that the physical and safety dimensions of Servperf Service Quality dimensions measured by five factors had the highest level satisfaction. It is also found that service quality perception differentiated according to some certain demographic factors.

In the final paper, Yavaş and Erdogan (2016) present the effect of foreign ownership on firm performance by considering Turkey as a case study for emerging market. The results indicate that foreign ownership improves firm profitability up to a certain level; however, after the threshold limit, the surge up in foreign ownership starts to deteriorate firm performance.
